Andrew --

Over the weekend we worked on some language around making the distinction between public and home charging. Here's what we came up with:

The finding/conclusion that electric vehicle charging service providers are not public utilities under this decision only applies to electric vehicle charging services offered to the general public in public charging locations, not to electric vehicle charging services offered at private locations not open to the general public.

Note that some more compact version of this would need to be a part of the new 'electric vehicle charging services' term that you added throughout the revised draft.

Let's chat about this when you get a chance -- 973-5921.

yours,
