From: Bottorff, Thomas E

Sent: 7/12/2011 8:09:50 AM

- To: Cherry, Brian K (/O=PG&E/OU=CORPORATE/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=BKC7); 'paul.clanon@cpuc.ca.gov' (paul.clanon@cpuc.ca.gov)
- Cc: Horner, Trina (/O=PG&E/OU=CORPORATE/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=TNHC); Hartman, Sanford (Law) (/O=PG&E/OU=Corporate/cn=Recipients/cn=SLHb); 'frank.lindh@cpuc.ca.gov' (frank.lindh@cpuc.ca.gov); 'michelle.cooke@cpuc.ca.gov' (michelle.cooke@cpuc.ca.gov)

Bcc:

Subject: Re: Fwd: SFGate: In court, PG&E deflects blame for San Bruno blast

Sandy Hartman will be calling Frank this morning to explain what we filed in our response (and send you a copy). The filing does not say that we will assign some of the blame for the losses to the residents.

Tom

-----Original Message-----From: Cherry, Brian K Sent: Monday, July 11, 2011 10:01 PM To: 'paul.clanon@cpuc.ca.gov'; Bottorff, Thomas E Cc: 'frank.lindh@cpuc.ca.gov'; 'michelle.cooke@cpuc.ca.gov'; Horner, Trina Subject: Re: Fwd: SFGate: In court, PG&E deflects blame for San Bruno blast

Paul - this is the first I've heard of this. I find it very hard to believe that this is true and not taken out of context. Let me follow up tomorrow.

----- Original Message -----From: Clanon, Paul [mailto:paul.clanon@cpuc.ca.gov] Sent: Monday, July 11, 2011 09:15 PM To: Cherry, Brian K Cc: Frank Lindh <frank.lindh@cpuc.ca.gov>; Michelle Cooke <michelle.cooke@cpuc.ca.gov> Subject: Fwd: SFGate: In court, PG&E deflects blame for San Bruno blast

Does he have his facts right here?

> In court, PG&E deflects blame for San Bruno blast  href="mailto:jvanderbeken@sfchronicle.com">Jaxon Van Derbeken,

- > Chronicle Staff Writer
- >
- >

> (07-11) 19:12 PDT SAN BRUNO -- Pacific Gas and Electric Co., which > issued a public apology last month for the 2010 natural gas explosion > in San Bruno, says in a new court filing that it should not have to > make payouts to victims who have sued the company because the blast > was caused by third-party damage to a "state of the art" pipeline.

&gt; Monday, July 11, 2011 (SF Chronicle)

> The company also indicated it would seek to assign some of the blame > for the losses from the explosion to residents themselves.

> PG&E has offered unsolicited cash payments to residents of the > neighborhood devastated in the Sept. 9 explosion, which killed eight > people and destroyed 38 homes. Last month, the company bought > full-page newspaper ads headlined, "We Apologize," and noted that > federal metallurgists looking into the cause of the explosion have > said the pipe ruptured at a faulty weld.

> However, in a July 5 filing in San Mateo County Superior Court in > response to more than 100 lawsuits seeking millions of dollars in > damages, PG&E's lawyers took a more combative stance. The company said > it should not be held liable for the disaster because "unforeseeable, > intervening and/or superseding acts of persons or entities" other than PG&E caused the blast.

> Sewer project

> The filing is not specific, but the only known activity around the > pipeline was a 2008 sewer-replacement project that San Bruno commissioned.

> The city and the private contractor that performed the work, D'Arcy > and Harty Construction of San Francisco, say they took steps to ensure > that the work - which involved breaking up old sewer pipe and > replacing it with a plastic line - did not damage the PG&E transmission pipe.

> Aside from its court filing, PG&E has said nothing publicly about > the sewer work. It had an inspector at the job site who approved the > construction plans, but he wasn't there while the work was performed.

> Pointing the finger

> However, in May, an industry trade group - which PG&E joined after > the blast - said the sewer project had probably weakened the pipe and > told federal investigators they should consider tests to account for > the possibility.

> Last month, an expert hired by a state-appointed panel also > suggested that the sewer work had probably played a role in the > explosion. But the expert, Robert Nickell, later backed away from that > finding, telling The Chronicle that fluctuations in gas pressure over > the years could have damaged the already flawed weld that eventually failed.

> In its court filing, PG&E also said the blast victims themselves

> "may have been legally responsible under a doctrine of comparative > negligence (or) contributory negligence" - factors that assign a > portion of blame to a plaintiff.

> PG&E's filing did not specify how residents might have been > negligent, or how that negligence contributed to the fireball that consumed their homes.

> Company spokeswoman Brittany Chord said Monday that the filing was > "a standard part of the legal process," and that the company would

> "continue to move forward and work to resolve the claims of all > parties as quickly as possible." City surprised

> San Bruno City Manager Connie Jackson said PG&E's court filing was > "completely surprising." She added, "It's unfortunate that they have > thrown everything plus the kitchen sink in this, to cover their legal > strategy."

> Michael Danko, an attorney who represents 40 blast victims, said

> PG&E officials "know no bounds."

> "I can forgive them for saying third party - you can forgive that,"

> Danko said. "But you cannot forgive them at all for blaming the victims."

> He added, "They had time to figure this out and decide whether they > really wanted to blame the victims who lost their homes or were > burned. After thinking about it for nine months, they said the answer > was yes." Already paid?

- > PG&E also suggested the payments that the company has already made
- > to some residents meant their lawsuits were invalidated "in whole or
- > in part." The firm made cash payouts of $15,000 to $50,000 after the
- > blast, on a scale that depended on the extent of damage, but said at > the time that the payments had no bearing on civil damages.

> PG&E's filing also downplayed claims in the lawsuits that the > company was running a shoddy pipeline system. The company said its > transmission pipes, including the one that exploded, were "consistent > with available technological, scientific and industrial state-of-the > art and in compliance with applicable regulation." E-mail Jaxon Van > Derbeken at jvanderbeken@sfchronicle.com.

>-----

> Copyright 2011 SF Chronicle

>