Brian -- it's really up to Tony. If he has additional things that we wants to talk about, I am more than happy to meet. But I don't have anything else on my list at the moment, and I suspect that his plate is plenty full this early in his tenure. So maybe we wait a few months until he has had more time to assess the situation and chart a course of action??

During our conversation on Friday, I offered to set up a meeting for him with various PG&E "alumni" in order to gather their perspectives on what's been happening at the company. His initial reaction was positive, but could you double check with Tom B just to make sure Tony really wants to do this and wasn't just being polite? If he does, I will start contacting people and develop a list of who might be interested. We can tackle the actual scheduling once we have a sense of who might be involved. My role would be limited to getting this set up -- I would not participate so that folks would feel free to be candid (with no regulator looking over their shoulders!). THANKS, Mike
