I'll second that. If you search the State Contoller's site, you can see if anyone else has forfeited to the state money that a utility or the tax board or whomever owes you. I went through the process in New York and it was pretty straightforward - had a check in hand in a couple of months.

Thanks Bri!!

If the State Controller has your funds, it means PG&E escheated those funds to the State of California. You have 7 years to reclaim the escheated funds by contacting the State Controller, offering proof of who you are, and they will send you a check.

this isn't a spam email. i was looking on the State Controller's website and turns out PG&E owes me $60. I looked a few people i know and they too are owed money. i have no idea what the process is for getting the money.

happy hunting!
