There's genuine improvement with PG&E's new management team. The accident sites are progressively closer to Starbucks locations now.

100 minutes to turn off the flow. Ten feet from PG&E headquarters. Think anyone will have fun with that one?

But no injuries (as far as I know), fixable, and a good time of week to make the repairs.

PG&E crews were working at Beale and Mission and pulled a 4 inch drip line out of a 16 inch high pressure main. Gas is blowing, no ignition. 4 valves are being closed. Channel 5 is on scene.

Anyone hear anything about a gas line problem in SF?
