Hi,

I will double check my advice with Carol, Liza, and the ALJ, but my advice is to shut down their electricity service after the first conversation to not do it again. We can't have someone die by trying to take out their smart meter. That will send a much nastier message then shutting them off.

Marzia,

I wanted to let you know about a protest at our Capitola office today. Apparently, Josh Hart and a group of 12 to 20 other people entered the office with camera crews, with some number of the customers "returning" their SmartMeters to PG&E. The police came and escorted them all out of the office.

I am asking our team to determine the names and addresses of the customers who pulled these meters off of their residences, and we will proceed to try to talk to the customers from there. My fear is that this will exacerbate what is already a growing problem and safety concern - customers pulling out their meters. Particularly if Mr. Hart is leading this effort, we can count on more of these incidents.
