Great and excellent idea. Hopefully someday nearby we can visit. Thanks Laura.

Of course! The team is interested, of course.

Let me offer another option too: I think we could get Ben Campbell (the lead hydrotest guy) to pull together a full set of photos from a variety of the tests we did last year, including the two where there were ruptures and one with the pinhole lead. He could come visit you and the Commissioner and really give a personal perspective on the testing with photographic images to make it more real. I know it's not the same as visiting a site, but we are all concerned that you may travel a long way and be disappointed if there isn't a lot of "action" when you arrive. It's impossible to predict exactly when the pressure test itself will happen. You could get a lot of info in a couple hours in an informal discussion with Ben.

Just a thought!
Are you playing this weekend?

Can you give me a hint about your likelihood of going to the hydrotest site next Wed/Thursday?

Thanks and happy Friday!
