Awwwww, thank you Julie!

And thank you, Laura! I really liked Roger when I met him. I shared with him that my dad is a wrestler too. He almost went to the Olympics but a little bundle of joy was born and he had to concentrate on work. Anyway, Paul mentioned he went to lunch with Roger but didn't offer details.

Hope neither of you are working today. We went plant shopping and I am burned to a crisp! Didn't realize it was so sunny out...

Yeah, I'm in the city. But sometimes it's not so bad being in the office on the weekends. I can play my music without headphones and focus in ways that are more difficult during the week. It's not all bad unless it starts happening too often... And yes, it beats working weekends AND worrying about managing 120 people and absorbing all of their worries and fears.

Definitely tell Roger to tell Paul. He takes Terrie for granted.

You are in the city? Oh sweetie, I'm sorry. I will go to the office later, but not to work on anything as important as a PD. But I am struck by the fact that YOU will make an important and positive impact WHEREVER you are. And now that I have crossed over to the dark side I understand just how critical the aljs are to crafting coherent policies and decisions. In other words you are perfect for this AND you don't have to manage anybody!

And Terrie, I neglected to tell you that Roger Frizzell thinks you are great and he's amazed by how well you handle the constant barrage of bs. He's a big fan. I told him to tell Paul. (He's in the wrestling hall of fame and would have gone to the olympics in 198? If the us hadn't stayed away that year.)

I am going to get on line now and tell my loved ones to unplug their toasters!

It's true I am my own worst enemy, but think that means I'm NOT smart in the ways that matter. But I like to work on the stuff that is interesting! Oh well.

You are so dedicated! I told you to act like you don't know what you're doing so you don't get cases. You're just too smart for your own good. :)

I agree it was fun! Unfortunately, Julie is in the office today working on the second PD after getting edits in late yesterday on the first one. My honeymoon as an ALJ is definitely over! But I'm glad we snagged lunch yesterday. Hope you both have more fun this weekend than I will...

May I just say, as this work week closes.(unless Julie is still working on that PD!)that lunch with you both was a great lift. The warmth and laughter and cone talk really restore me every time. Thanks so much.
Have good, fire-free weekends!

Guess that means we can't talk about ZOMBIELAND. I'm hoping Terry at least has seen it. I resisted and then it was just on TV one night this week when I had collapsed on my bed and wanted something mindless. I thought it was hilarious and couldn't believe how good the campy acting was! Bill Murray, Woody Harrelson, that girl from The Help . . .

That's fine. We'll go over around noon. Just warning you: I am on a deadline today to make changes to a PD, so I probably can't afford more than about an hour or a little more. Can't do three hours, today, sorry!

When: Friday, April 13, 2012 12:00 PM-2:00 PM (UTC-08:00) Pacific Time (US & Canada).

Where: Max's, I assume?

I have an 11:15 "urgent" meeting that will make getting to Max's by 11:45 tough. Will get there just as soon as I can though!
