Subject: Heads up about a self-report filed this afternoon re cathodic protection inspection

Paul and Terrie

PG&E filed a self-report this afternoon about a non-compliance issue regarding the system that prevents corrosion, known as cathodic protection (CP), on gas transmission lines. In 180 locations throughout the service area, inadequate CP levels were not promptly addressed on transmission pipelines.

Jane Yura has called Julie Halligan to provide a heads up about the self-report. I don't know whether they have spoken yet.

There has been some media interest on this issue within the last hour so our media folks put together the attached news release as background and I wanted you to be aware.
