He's applying for that, and for worker's comp too (he works as a private investigator too, and was coming back from serving somebody). Also he used to work in the 80s for a law firm that does personal injury work, and one of their top lawyers is on his case now. I think the money will work itself out over time, but he doesn't have enough to cover his basic bills right now.

I found the site and made a contribution. I wonder if he will qualify for disability, though it takes a while to get it.

Just made a contribution. Did he play with Raq at Yoshi's?

What a great session on Safety Leadership! It's easy to see why you were determined to get those folks here and to get a high level contingent of PG&E leadership to hear them. Sumwalt is just phenomenal and I am pretty sure I would vote for him for anything he pursued. And Downey spoke so directly and effectively to the board role. Our board paid attention and they were impressed.

I know what a pain it is to put something like this together, but you hit a home run. It was historic to have both Commissioners and utility leaders together for the first time to LISTEN to positive, practical ideas and to show how good can come out of a terrible tragedy. That positive forward vision has been lacking and so today set a new direction.

I am hearing lots of good comments, and relief, of course too. But given how important trust is, the positive tone set today will go a long way toward a better relationship.

This was a great farewell tour event!

Thanks

Laura
