Hi Adam,

We have 63.018 MW on the waitlist.

We are changing the update on the website to include the bolded sentences: "PG&E has received contracts for review and approval that exceed the available capacity under the Electric Tariff for E-SRG. A waitlist for E-SRG was created. Until the E-SRG and E-PWF tariffs are replaced by a new tariff under Senate Bill 32, any capacity made available by contract terminations will be allocated to the waitlist. Due to the large volume of PPAs submitted for the E-SRG waitlist, PG&E is not accepting any further additions.

I hope this helps.

Thanks!

Meredith

Subject: E-SRG question

Hi Meredith,

Quick question. I've been contacted by a few developers wondering if PG&E's website is accurate in stating that it has 0 MW of available capacity under its E-SRG tariff.

Website here:

<http://www.pge.com/b2b/energysupply/wholesaleelectricssolicitation/standardcontractsfo>

Does this mean that 100% of PG&E's E-SRG allocation is currently under contract? I presume this to be the case, but just want to be sure before I start telling folks that it's definitely the case and that they'll need to wait for Re-MAT to become effective.

Any insight you could provide would be great.

Many thanks,

Adam
