John or Erik—Do you have anything beyond this press release? I had heard a lightning strike, but I believe root cause is still pending.

Let me get you the latest in a bit. On a different call right now.

Jearl, do you have anything more updated than this?

UNIT 2 AT PG&E'S DIABLO CANYON POWER PLANT SAFELY

SHUT DOWN FOLLOWING ELECTRICAL DISTURBANCE

AVILA BEACH, Calif. – Unit 2 at Pacific Gas and Electric Company's (PG&E) Diablo Canyon Power Plant safely shut down as designed at 12:08 p.m. today after an electrical disturbance occurred in equipment that moves power to the state's electric grid. Unit 1 continues to safely generate power.

Plant operators responded to the shutdown according to procedures and are working to determine the cause of the incident. The unit remains in a safe condition and will be restored to service after the cause is fully understood and the equipment is fully tested.

PG&E has informed the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission and appropriate local and state officials.

I just saw a small press notice in Rough & Tumble that Diablo Canyon Unit #2 closed "abruptly" yesterday with no word as to when it would restart.
