With the wet weather, I've been particularly fond of the smell of the remoistened urine and excretions in the carpeted BART cars. If I close my eyes I can envision myself in a dickensonian tenement. The fellow at the nearest door with the tubercular cough just adds some auditory cues that match the smell.

Just in time for the annual production of A Christmas Carol!

Sure, that works for me. It might be nice. It's what we need. A big rain to make its way through the streets of Oakland and take all the filth with it. Maybe then the regular people can come out of their bunkers and enjoy one fucking fresh clear day.

Do I seem terse? Blame the thumb keyboard.

That or Monday, if the weather clears up Sunday?
