And it just started raining a little ... man, it was so nice to have a frost-free ride this morning.

I actually had a very pleasant interaction with a middle aged woman going for a morning walk on a trail. I took a saw with me to remove a small tree that had been downed by the January storms (about 8 inches in diameter) and was blocking the trail. She came upon me while I was just sawing through the final inch, and was very appreciative. Nice to demonstrate to her that not all mountain bikers are pricks. I was expecting to get some shit from her, but I think since she walks in the pre-dawn hour, she probably doesn't see many mtbs and therefore was friendly. Then I just rode around and kept taking the slightly longer fork until I realized there was no way to get in on time, and then I took the direct downhill route.

Did you do your south park assault this morning? The sky over the city was very interesting at dawn today.

As for your ticket out -- you're disciplined plan is working out! That should feel good.

Good suggestion. It's the highest ever right now, and is my ticket out.

It was gorgeous out this am, wasn't it? Glad you were out. Actually, yesterday was nicer, I think.

Pull up your brokerage acct balance. Cold solace, I know ...

I had nice ride this morning. I was late because I didn't want to head home and go into work.
