I'm good either way.

The "team" (Hall, Chipkevich, Scott) think that the title of your panel should be changed a bit.

It currently is "Leading Safety – What does regulatory leadership look like?"

And they think it should reflect the "shared responsibility" principle (a title which was previously rejected) and so now they are suggesting: "Safety Leadership – what does the Industry need from the Commission, and what does the Commission need from Industry?"

I mean, do you even care?

Here is what the General sent me this morning, in response to the questions you have already seen. So I believe this question is what got them thinking again about the overall title.

BTW, less than 24 hours until wheels down in HI.

I good with these questions. More simply put is, "What does the Industry want from the Commission and what does the Commission want from industry?"

For Panel 1

- What is climate?
- What is corporate culture?
- How does Climate and Culture effect safety in an organization?
- Who sets the climate and culture in the organization?
- Who is the "real" Safety Officer in an organization?
- How does a two track investigation system work? One investigation is only about safety and is privileged information that is walled off from the punitive investigation.

That is enough for starters.
