Cool plan! I can't read the article on my bb, will check it out.

I'd say go for vanguard directly. I think it's vtsmx, and you can own it directly through vanguard inexpensively. The wells deal is gone, though I am grandfathered in. I can show you what vanguard looks like to work with. Easy.

Ugh, more dad falls/ drama.

yours,

Do I seem terse? Blame the thumb keyboard.

Not as wonky as your bottle-heads, or whatever it is, but I liked this article, and thought you might, too. http://baselinescenario.com/2013/04/02/memo-to-employers-stop-wasting-your-employees-money/?utm_source=feedburner&utm_medium=feed&utm_campaign=Feed%3A+BaselineScen

I'm really sucking at making any investments towards retirement. Once AO starts her new job, it's time to start plowing money in again. I don't think AO has made much of a contribution in the last decade. I have some time off coming, and one project is to get my three 401k programs into a single place, with a low-fee total-market fund. Something like a fidelity account (which I think I have through PG&E). Or do you still recommend wells fargo?
