Subject: Re: PG&E response to General Hagan's 5/16/13 request

No. PSEP is transmission only, as directed by the Commission.

Distribution costs are in our "general rate case" -- and there is one of those before the Comm right now. We have been spending more on distribution safety than was authorized by the Comm in our last general rate case. Shareholders have to pick up those additional costs.

Transmission costs are typically (ie, in the days before San Bruno and PSEP) put forward in our "gas transmission and storage (GT&S)" rate case. That is also known as "Gas Accord V" in table 1 of our May 16 response to you.

I know its confusing and I don't know why its broken out like this, except precedent. Our gas transmission rate cases were known as "gas accords" because parties were mostly able to settle on the big issues and bring that to the cpuc. I doubt we will see that again for a while ...

Yes, I could. Very helpful. Is distribution in the PSEP?

Good morning
Hope you were able to open the document I sent you last night.

The distribution safety spending in particular is relevant, in my opinion. Distribution is what serves homes and businesses directly, of course, and there are immediate customer impacts. The previous PGE gas fire fatality was a distribution failure; that was the Rancho Cordova accident that the CPUC fined PGE $38 million for.

Need some help. Can you give me more specifics on what the money the second page of the enclosure was for? How did it relate to safety?

Thanks

FYI

This response was provided via the service list this afternoon, but since some of you aren't on that I am providing it directly as General Hagan did last week.

Regards

Laura
