GUGGENHEIM 1st edition Bilbao

GUGGENHEIM BILBAO

Conference and exhibition on the key opportunities in USA for European companies and regions

USA week in Europe Business exhibition and conference

For four days, Bilbao will be the US business capital of Europe, as it will be hosting the first edition of the USAWEEK in Europe. The city will become a meeting point for the different key economic sectors that will be presented during the event. An event which will enable European companies and public and private institutions to learn first hand and in detail about the major projects and business opportunities in North America.

It is the week where the world's largest market comes to Europe. Recognized business leaders from key corporations and regional economic development authorities will present the current main projects that are being considered and executed as of today, in the main market of the world. They will also explain the advantages of doing business in the US.

North American economic development agencies will unveil their proposals for attracting investment and demonstrate how they can provide the necessary support for European companies wishing to establish a presence in the U.S.

This conference and exhibition aims at closing the gap between the North American and European markets, enabling companies, institutions and business leaders to come together. Its goal is also to lower the US market entry barriers and promote trade among the different European and North American regions.

Corporations and institutions representing each of the economic sectors and authorities from different US regions will speak about their different investment attraction strategies, and business opportunities in sectors such as Infrastructure, Transportation, Environment, Energy, Aerospace, Automotive, Technology and Manufacturing.

Companies around Europe will be able to learn directly about projects and business opportunities, in areas such as rail, roads, high speed rail, water, offshore wind, solar, shale gas, commercial space and manufacturing, to name a few.

The USAWEEK event will have an open format, where participants will be able to choose the number of days that they will be attending. They will have the opportunity to interact and network with speakers, institutions and companies involved in the different projects and business opportunities that will be presented during the conference and exhibition. There will also be one-on-one meetings networking events and social gatherings.

Exhibition space will be available for companies wishing to show and demonstrate their latest projects, solutions or technologies. Similarly economic authorities and institutions will be able to present the main strategic projects they are developing and introduce their region as the right business destination in terms of location, operations or investment.

Target Supply and demand

The targeted profiles attending the first edition of this unique event include: Corporate Board members, C-Level Executives, Business Development Executive Directors, International Directors, Regional Economic Authorities and Institutional leaders from both sides of the Atlantic, looking to do business in USA with European companies or public organizations involved in trade and investment promotion.

The participation of US companies looking for European partners, European companies seeking business and project opportunities in the US, regional trade promotion authorities, economic development agencies looking for bidders or service companies providing sought-after services in both sides of the Atlantic (such as law firms or financial institutions), will make this event the perfect place to do business in these major markets.

Last, but not least, various economic development authorities will have the opportunity to showcase their region, presenting the sectors and the reasons why the region should be considered for investment or as the right location for companies to become established.

USA WEEK Europe will focus on leading growing sectors where business opportunities are happening as you read this brochure. As a brief example, we emphasize on the following:

-Infrastructures: The main infrastructure projects being launched and developed in California, related to transportation and water, will be presented. The High Speed Rail and the Delta River projects will serve as some of the examples of the booming infrastructure market in the US.

-Energy: From Shale Gas in the East Coast to Solar projects in the West Coast, the North-American energy market is undergoing massive change. Great opportunities lay ahead for European companies willing to enter the market.

-Manufacturing: Led by the Automotive and the Aerospace industries, where new technologies mean business opportunities for growth.

-Technology: We will look at innovation, and which are the leading technologies that are making a difference within the US economy, and the direction European companies should be taking.

Event Value by differentiation

The first edition of USA WEEK Europe will take place at the Basque Country (in Southern Europe, recognized for its strong industrial sector), it is clearly differentiated from other initiatives promoting trade, that are focussed only on institutional presentations. The week of USA in Europe means business, and speakers will definitely focus on business matters.

More than just a conference, this event will offer:

- Business Matchmaking
- Exhibition Space
- Roundtables
- Social events
- Culture related activities

This is the first edition, and each following edition will take place in leading european cities, strongly linked to North America, just as Bilbao is linked through the Guggenheim Museum.

Promotion Delegates

The event will be attracting public and private participants from areas related to the main themes of the conference and exhibition. To ensure the success, our main promotional activities will center on press relations, on-line campaigns, mailing to the top management of the 3.000 most important corporations in Europe and communication through the main trade promotion agencies in Europe.
