

From: Clanon, Paul
Sent: 8/7/2013 2:14:36 PM
To: Doll, Laura (/O=PG&E/OU=CORPORATE/CN=RECIPIENTS/CN=LRDD)
Cc:
Bcc:

Subject: Re: Message re Katherine from Steve -- had you heard this? (I corrected two typos)

I thought of you yesterday when I was listening to a podcast about Fermilab's using a ferret named Felicia to clean the miles of small pipes that are part of their particle accelerator. Apparently ferrets never see a "burrow" they don't want to run to the end of. They trained Felicia to run in harness, towing fishing line, then they used the fishing line to pull various cleaners through the pipes. Felicia was living happily in retirement when she died suddenly. Perhaps she had a wall fall on her.

Sometimes the best pig for the job is a ferret named Felicia.

On Aug 7, 2013, at 2:08 PM, "Doll, Laura" <LRDD@pge.com> wrote:

This is why you are such an important person in my life. (Along with Larry, of course.) I thought and thought about a punchline, and then realized the simple facts would be sufficient fodder.

But I do like the phrase "had a wall fall on her" – actually a very Texan construction. I can still hear Ann Richards saying "howr yer mom 'n em?"

From: Clanon, Paul [mailto:paul.clanon@cpuc.ca.gov]
Sent: Wednesday, August 07, 2013 2:05 PM
To: Doll, Laura
Subject: Re: Message re Katherine from Steve -- had you heard this? (I corrected two typos)

Do you have an alibi?

On Aug 7, 2013, at 2:03 PM, "Doll, Laura" <LRDD@pge.com> wrote:

Katherine had a wall fall on her over the weekend and she has four broken bones in her foot. They will put some pins in sometime soon, maybe Friday.

PG&E is committed to protecting our customers' privacy.
To learn more, please visit
<http://www.pge.com/about/company/privacy/customer/>

PG&E is committed to protecting our customers' privacy.
To learn more, please visit
<http://www.pge.com/about/company/privacy/customer/>