After we spoke, I talked with Beckie Menten at MEA. She gave me a very different version of events than you conveyed to me. For example, she said that (on Tuesday) the MEA received another round of redlines to the agreement from PG&E. So, according to MEA, they have not yet signed the agreement. (You had said MEA finally signed the agreement.) There are many other examples of their version of events differing from PG&E's.

I asked MEA to prepare a document summarizing their version of events and where they see things stand on the remaining issue of contention: availability of MEA OBR for non-MEA customers. Once I receive that, we plan to ask both PG&E and MEA to meet with us to work towards a better working relationship. From what I can tell, it does not appear to be working very well.

P.S. - Beckie also said that she has not been working directly with you, and therefore you may not be fully informed about the current status of MEA's involvement with PG&E. She said that [Redacted] (sp?) has been her primary point of contact.

Hi Sid / [Redacted]

MEA tells me PG&E has yet to enable them to implement their OBR program. When I last spoke to Redac he said he would check on status. What's up?

Best,
Simon
