I'm in San Diego those days. Nov 20 or 21 work for me . . . and get us closer to Julie's birthday!

I am a free November 12th or 13th. I've always wanted to serve on a jury but never have.

Yes, I'm serious, and yes, happy to share once it's over. It could be worse. At least it's not a six month sequestered deal. I have mixed feelings about the whole thing. I like doing my civic duty, and I like the democratic process in theory. But I also had the bad experience of serving on a jury in Oakland about 10 years ago when it was a DUI case that took EIGHT DAYS! Seriously. Should have taken 15 minutes. The only really good news is that the majorly jerky guy who I really didn't want to have to serve with on this trial was dismissed by the defense at the last minute! The demographic makeup of the jury is interesting as are the questions they ask you to decide whether to keep you on the jury. Have either of you done it?

Anyway, what about lunch November 8, 12 or 13?

Julie

This is kind of exciting, in a perverse way.

Take notes and bring sketches . . . let us know when you are free!

Ok, you two are not going to believe this. I am now juror #9 on a criminal trial in Richmond. it is set to run through at least next Tuesday. So unfortunately I can't have lunch with you two on Monday. Can we postpone?

Confirming to make sure it's on Laura's calendar. I still have to worry about jury duty, but hopefully it won't interfere unless I happen to get stuck on a jury.
