I believe that is the continuing plan, but I'll check on that. I was out there on Saturday to see for myself and can vouch for the fact that there were lots of traffic personnel directing both cars and pedestrians.

Laura,

From what I understand, this weekend PG&E was walking pedestrians across the cross walk and holding traffic with hand sings. This seems to be sufficient to address the safety concerns, as long as that it happens in the mornings and evenings as well. Could you let me know if it's the plan to use the hand signs going forward? If so, that may be sufficient and a meeting with the construction manager may not be required.

Thanks,

Liza

Laura,

Thank you, I will follow-up with Amy and let you know.

Funny thing – I was listening to the voicemail and forgot that it was a message and started talking back... and was surprised that you just kept talking over me and then hung up 😊. Time to go home 😊.

Liza

Just left a VM. I think we might reach a better resolution if we can connect the individual with the construction manager asap. That way they can walk through the construction site and directly discuss concerns and – perhaps – come up with some ideas to address them that will work within the city construction and traffic rules.

Perhaps Monday?

I'm happy to coordinate that if you are agreeable to making the connection?

Thanks

Laura
