KTVU

DUBLIN, Calif. —

An oven exploded inside the kitchen at Alameda County's Santa Rita jail Tuesday, critically injuring one person and injuring 10 others, authorities said.

According to the Alameda County Fire Department, the explosion took place at around 11:42 a.m. at the massive facility that houses 4,000 inmates.

Alameda County Fire spokeswoman Aisha Knowles said the oven caught fire and then exploded.

Several emergency units were set to the scene to treat the injured. Four of the injured were taken to local hospitals while seven others were being treated in the jail's infirmary.

The cause of the explosion is under investigation, Knowles said.

Santa Rita Jail is Alameda County's main jail and ranks as the third-largest jail in the state, according to county officials.

This is all we know as of now. "explosion at jail."

Since no gas released, I am hopeful it has no PG&E connection at all, but will let you know.
