I guess we shouldn't be surprised that the withdrawal method didn't work.

It means we get to do another round of this dance. Maybe your team can come up with a opt-in PTR, and share it with us before we file. We can then have a very limited protest. If it is opt-in they want, and opt in is all we'd want at this point, maybe the points of disagreement would be limited.

I feel like the rate design plate is plenty full between now and 2016, though.

You should read the denial. The crux was that the CPUC ordered y'all to file a PTR. And you have homework!

PG&E shall file

updated testimony by April 1, 2014 that proposes an opt-in PTR program for all of its eligible residential customers, to begin no later than May, 2015.
