Well, he's thinking this week of a half measure that I tried to talk him out of (along the lines you mentioned. Allow the opt-in ptr to limp along and eliminate the cost-effectiveness showing). This half measure has all the work and uselessness (and likely down vote) of the whole thing, in my opinion. So yeah, at least scheduling the talk with him might be helpful. He said he guesses that talking to alj management is his only recourse besides 1/2 measure, he might need to be girded up on that. Ugh, dunno. I know you're out, but am open to strategic suggestion on how to avoid this huge pile of useless work.

Phew! Do you think I should double-team him? I could get lunch or coffee with him next week.

Do I seem terse? Blame the thumb keyboard.
