Dear Larry,

I don't make the decision to contact you lightly, but I want to make sure you're aware of important decisions that are being made about California solar policy.

The California Public Utilities Commission is preparing to decide how long existing solar customers can expect to receive the important bill saving benefits of California's popular net metering program. But big California utilities are up to their old tricks, trying to protect their profits by lobbying at the Commission to change the rules on Californians who go solar.

Rooftop solar systems reliably produce power for 30 years or more, and solar customers should expect stable rules and predictable credit on their power bills for that same period of time. Changing the rules on solar customers mid-stream is unfair to Californians who have made a good investment for our economy and the environment.

The solar advocacy group Vote Solar Initiative will deliver a petition to the commissioners urging them to allow solar customers to receive net metering benefits for the 30-year lifetime of their solar system. Click here to sign the petition and let them know how you feel. (Note: if you prefer not to receive future emails from Vote Solar, simply un-click the box that says "Sign up to receive solar policy updates from Vote Solar")

We can't let the utilities rewrite the rules for solar customers to protect their outdated business model. Please sign the petition, and share with others who might do the same.

Sincerely,

Lyndon Rive
CEO
