Pep talks are good, although I struggle not to sound high handed (which I generally am).

The sign should say -- first priority bike or wheelchairs, then luggage, then walkies. They have good existing signage on it. We should identify as bikies when we make the suggestion and say that bikies are good at nestling bikes together.

I will hide a bit. Projects and such. AO and I will disappear Sunday morning for a 2 hour ride while her mom muddles about to get going (she takes forever to get going -- some is her dithering, some is some serious & legitimate physical/health problems).

AO's fuse burned out a decade ago, so she is completely unable to handle her mom's bullshit and narcissism, which needless to say, is a bad combo. I gave her a pep talk last night about letting shit slide, and just enjoying the good parts of her mom that are still present (obscured a bit by the batshit crazy she brings with her). Her mom is sliding down that path towards hating the "others" that have it so great while she has to suffer. Like the immigrants. Ohhh, kay.

We are taking her to this show on Saturday. I actually think she'll like it -- but if she had any self-awareness it should make her head explode.

As for bikes, yeah, the wild west is best - it just needs good signage. The rack takes up gobs of space, and only holds three.

Cool! Thanks for the weather tip. I hope to see the car next week. Let's comment on the bike area. The current wild west thing is probably best.

MIL! Ugh. Can you help somebody move on Sun? It can't help much to have you there. I prefer R gone when I have a family bs thing. You could leave them a gift of great take out a couple of times and hide in your shed/man cave/garage.
