Okay, got it. So they buy campy rather than shimano? Meanwhile, I wish that a couple more bicycle companies were big enough to have big engineering depts.

Do I seem terse? Blame the thumb keyboard.

I think it is just a big “corporate” brand. Whatever. Haters gotta hate.

Gosh, didn't know Specialized was hated. Will ask you. But no physical objects, except some LPs, have a soul.

Indeed.

Test rode a specialized 29er. It was medium-level, and it felt really awesome. Does that make me a sellout? I once overheard a fellow in a beard wearing carhart "shants" telling another person that Specialized bikes have no "soul." If I get a specialized, will I be damned?

Also, it's one of those many situations where the person is more convinced they are right because everyone disagrees with them.

He is representing a single individual (probably a friend?) named Ruth somebody-or-other.

I miss the 1950s, when shit like this wouldn't have been allowed to happen. Too many participant ribbons given out in grade-school. All this lip service to "everybody gets a voice" and eventually folks start to believe it. Sigh. But you've heard my rants before...

I'm going to go to Mike's bikes and look at carbon fiber mountain bikes. AO is going to the bank today to pull out $2500 in cash for a possible Craigslist purchase. I'm such a ho.
