I don't think a 29er is in the cards this year, but a 32c-wearing road bike will be. Hmm, hipster handlebars? Anyway, we should play hooky and take the ferry to Angel Island some time and hang out for a couple of hours. Not the cheapest ride, but super cool.

You gonna get a 29er? I actually think you'd have fun exploring on one. And yes, for Berkeley roads it would be much more comfy. Unless I'm going more than 10 miles, I really prefer my 29er -- if I had slicks on it I probably would leave my road bike in the garage except for group rides and races.

I like that they seem to have overcome the stigma against the bars being above the seat. I am looking forward to the setup trickling into hybrids, since I think with that configuration, they will be way more useful. Also, by the way, riding around Berkeley with 25c tires at 100psi kinda sucks. Looking forward to having a bike that fits 32c.
