Yeah, the monthly vs daily thing is definitely senior vs junior. And yeah, having a perception that perqs are going away is really serious at a govt agency. Generally not worth fighting.

I'm glad your starting to warm up to Peevey a bit – I feel the same way. But I think I generally like the industry/union alliance liberals more than you do.

Peevey is right about the morale part. In this last year, I'm actually really growing to respect him as a leader. (he can be a silly and petulant bully from time to time – but hey, we all have our weak spots!)

I think Paul's thing about getting in more monthly parkers may be true, but it does substitute monthly parkers for the intermittent daily ones. It was one small perk that employees enjoyed.

There is a perception that slowly each perk is being removed. Granted, the level of professionalism being expected could be raised, but I do think that the senior leadership reporting to Paul doesn't have sufficient interaction with rank-and-file. Age old organizational problem.
